

Tracy DiGioia
Senior Manager, Strategic Partnerships
MITRE

Tracy DiGioia cultivates and manages external relationships and partnerships designed to benefit public interest programs for finance, healthcare, climate, transportation, veterans affairs, and homeland security. Her professional experience includes leadership roles in strategic planning, business development, and contract management. She served as lead author for MITRE's successful proposals to operate federally funded research and development centers for the federal government, valued at over $1 billion annually. Tracy's current focus is on regional investment and collaboration opportunities that promote equity and inclusion in the technology sector.
