

Todd Mann
Executive Director
National Consortium of Secondary STEM Schools

As Executive Director of the National Consortium of Secondary STEM Schools, Todd Mann guides the vision and future of NCSSS by elevating the awareness, significance and value of STEM education. NCSSS is an association representing the leading high schools in the country that specialize in STEM approaches and outcomes. He is also Chair of the Stem Education Coalition, a large group of organizations engaged in policy on the Hill and in the Executive Branch.

With 22 years of association leadership and 17 years of business experience, Todd's strategic planning expertise and success at integrating technology as an accessible tool to members and consumers, have created new methodologies for delivering key messages, education, and resources to multiple audiences.

His advocacy for STEM schools comes naturally as Todd spent the first few years of his career on Capitol Hill. Since then, he was part of the team that created the concept of placing full-service banks branches in supermarkets and pioneered an educational TV channel over the Internet made possible by patenting technology from a company he took public.

Todd was among the first men to attend Vassar College, where he graduated cum laude and later served as a Trustee. He completed a financial executive education at the Goizueta Business School at Emory University.
